

Lemon Grove Schools Ask for $1,200,000 State Funds

More Class Rooms Needed Before Fall

Byron Netzey, superintendent of the Lemon Grove School District, was in Sacramento last week where he submitted the revised application for school funds to the State Department of Finance.

The Lemon Grove School District is asking for $1,200,000 of the recent State Bond Issue, for the construction of additional class rooms.

This district was one of the first three to make application for funds made available by the passage of the bond issue, and Mr. Netzey appeared before the Department of Finance with complete data to round out the original application.

While in Sacramento it was Mr. Netzey's privilege to sit in on a meeting of the State Allocation Board at which time they set up the policy for the future workings of the board.

The Lemon Grove School District is one of the fastest growing districts in the state, school registration here jumped from 275 in 1940 to more than 1600 10 years later.

It has been impossible for the district to keep up with the growth, and a fourth school is planned on San Miguel.

Lack of Interest Defeats Candidate

Incumbent trustees Charles Irwin and Lester Freeman of La Mesa were re-elected to the Grossmont High School Board, with Mrs. Marian S. Batchelder of Lemon Grove a close third.

The vote: 1487 votes.

Irwin 1340 votes.

Batchelder 1247 votes.

pleased with the showing made by their candidate who was only 93 votes behind the second candidate. Two were elected.

In the Lemon Grove School District election L. R. Heder got 271 votes and Mrs. Brady, a write-in got 91 votes.

The 4-H Club sponsored by the Lemon Grove Kiwanis Club, is growing faster than anticipated by Joseph Pickens, chairman of the agricultural committee of the club, who is in charge of the 4-H club work, and that he needs leaders who can help with the activities.

Hi, Neighbor

by Mac Rex Graham

Memorial Day!

What memories come to us as we recall Memorial Days of our childhood. We called it Decoration Day then. I can never forget the thrill of going to the gathering of the G.A.R. at a patriotic program on that day. The local orator made a speech and we sang "Tenting Tonight" and other Army songs.

Then we all got into horse-drawn carriages or buggies and went to the cemetery. Leading a procession formed there was a life and drum corps, back of which were the Civil War Veterans, by the side of each one a young girl dressed in white and carrying a wreath or bouquet.

How proud I was to walk beside my grandfather, Captain John L. Rex, so tall and stately; to me the grandest man in the world, with his freshly pressed suit of navy blue and brass buttons.

After all the graves marked with an American flag were decorated, families congregated around their own plots and put flowers on the graves of their departed loved ones.

How thankful I am for the memories and the love of country instilled in that generation through the serious observation of patriotic days.

Observing of Memorial Day in 1950 is a far cry from days of even 20 years ago. Some communities do stop long enough to have a program of an hour's duration, but most of the populace is too busy taking a three-day trip to the mountains, going to picnics, etc., to stop for one hour to honor the memory of our soldier dead.

However, there is some sentiment being kept alive through the making of poppies by our veterans in hospitals. Money received from the sale of these poppies means so much to them for many of them have dependents.

Friday and Saturday of this week, poppies are being sold on the streets of Lemon Grove and other communities. As you buy yours, make a pledge to do more for our living veterans, especially for those for whom the war will never end.

As you wear that poppy, do so with pride and gratitude that you live in the Land of the Free and the Home of the Brave.

Political Parade

CLEM WHITAKER, Jr.

Delaring that President Truman's recent political tour cost an estimated $250,000—and was tabbed non-political solely so that the bill could be charged up to the American taxpayers—some of the members of Congress reportedly are considering the introduction of legislation to clear the air on the business of campaigning at public expense once and for all.

The measure under consideration, following the practice in Great Britain, would have the taxpayers foot the campaign bills for all candidates, regardless of party, for national office. There would be rigid ceilings, however, on what candidates could spend.

Most Americans probably would prefer not to adopt the British plan of subsidizing candidates. It's bad enough to pay taxes to support a million and one subsidy programs and the bureau to administer them without having to subsidize the election of politicians, too.

But the President's recent trip does point up the fact that legislation to this effect not only would prohibit the questionable use of public funds for political purposes, but would be fairer than the present system under which the taxpayers are forced to pay some campaign costs of the "ins" while the "outs" pay their own.

That the President's taxpayer-financed tour to "dedicate" Grand Coulee Dam—and incidentally to make major speeches in some 16 States where Democratic congressional candidates needed help—was political, was obvious. In the first place, Grand Coulee Dam has been dedicated a number of times in the past. In fact, just about every generator put into use at the dam has been dedicated!

Furthermore, the President made it abundantly clear himself that the trip was political when at every stop he lit into all and sundry who have had the temerity to oppose the legislative program. (No mention was made of the fact that the Democratic-controlled 81st Congress has been just as loathe to pass the Truman program as was the Republican 80th.)

When you stop to think about it, so long as the Nation professes to be wedded to the two-party system, there is merit in the suggestion that the government pay campaign costs for all candidates. If not that, then at least steps should be taken to see that the party in power keeps its hands out of the trough when it's looking for a method to finance some high-powered campaigning.

Under any other set-up the voter (taxpayer) simply is being fleeced and might just as well be aware of the fact.

FROM THE NEWS CIRCUIT
JAMES DORAIS

California registration figures for the June Primary Election just released by Secretary of State Frank M. Jordan confirm the claims of ardent Bourbons that in name at least, California is as solidly Democratic as though it were located south of the Mason-Dixon Line.

Of the State's 4,925,369 registered voters (the highest recorded at any Primary, though slightly less than the registration at the 1948 General election), 58 percent identified themselves as Democrats. Only 38 percent owned up to being Republicans.

Of the remaining six percent, most were voters who declined to be affiliated with any party. There are still 19,000 IPPers around, and a few Prohibitionists and other adherents to minor parties. There was one Whig.

In only two Counties, Orange and Little Alpine, did Republican registration exceed Democratic.

If one pins complete faith in statistics, it is quite apparent that the Democratic party is doing all right in California. The growing Democratic registration would indicate that the majority of voters approve the present-day Welfare State principles and objectives of the party whose lineage, strangely enough, goes back to Thomas Jefferson who believed that the best governed were the least governed.

It would indicate too, that Republicans have failed to do a convincing job of presenting to voters a forthright, aggressive program of their own. It would certainly indicate that "me too" non-partisan type Republican strategy doesn't win many converts.

In view of the statistics, out-of-State political observers, unfamiliar with California's cross-filing system, would undoubtedly reach those conclusions. California politicians, however, can never be sure of anything.

Should half the democrats in California suddenly decide that taxing one's way to Utopia isn't very practical, few would rush to County Clerks' offices to change their registration. For under the cross-filing system, anybody can vote for any candidate at the Primaries instead of just at General Elections.

In spite of the almost-as-heavy Democratic registration in the recent past, California has had a Republican Governor for eight years and preliminary polls show that the chances are good that he will be returned to office for another four.

So "non-partisan" has California become in its voting habits that two years ago candidates in 58 of the 80 assembly districts in the State were elected at the Primaries by double nominations. Of those candidates, 36 were registered Republicans and only 22 were registered Democrats!

They don't understand California in places like Chicago and Washington. But then, we don't always understand ourselves either.

Talks and Walks With Mother Nature

BY TRIXIE TREGANZA

June 23—This morning we were up by 5:30. My usual excellent pancakes were not a success, they were eatable but not delectable. House cleaning and washing filled in the morning hours. We could hear the distant roll of thunder, and little skippers were flying overhead. Father T. mentioned that he would not venture far, for rain was imminent. About noon the great black clouds rolled over the mountains accompanied by the white wind clouds and thunder heads, the lightning was quick and sharp and the thunder seemed to be tearing the heavens asunder. Great sheets of water came down cooling the air, then rain turned to hail, and with the thumping of the stones on our tin roof, we could scarcely hear the fury of the storm without. All afternoon the rain continued, and there was nothing to do but replenish the fire and read.

Baby could not understand being shut up after several days of delightful freedom, she was peevish and coaxed to go out of doors. I wrapped her up and stood in the doorway about an hour, but she wanted to get down and play in the grass. Many times we wondered what time it might be; for none of us had brought a time piece. All afternoon it was dark, and with the constant pitter patter we could not hear the evening song of the birds. It was quite late when Father came in, wet and hungry with a piece of bear meat from the trapper's camp. Bear meat! How wild and primitive it seemed, living on the very outskirts of cosmopolitanism. It had taken a pot of beans, all day to cook in this high altitude, but we enjoyed them. After dinner we listened to Father's tales of life in the early days among the Indians. The hour was quite late when we retired, but as long as the rain continued we could not go to bed.

June 24—Very early the next day Father went to Brighton for milk. All night long the rain had continued, and this morning it was still drizzling. The clouds were broken in places where the brilliant sunlight poured out, only for a few seconds. Showers and sunshine alternated during the morning hours, but in the late afternoon the sodden gray clouds let forth a steady downpour. Once between showers I ran out to reconnoiter about the cabin. My fingers were burning for a find, and I felt the huge pines must contain some treasure, when I espied a nest about eight feet up.

I climbed up to find four light blue eggs, one entirely broken by the hail of yesterday, another dented. The eggs were stone cold had doubtless been deserted. The nest was quite large, built of pine sticks lined with grasses and horsehair, the underside contained paper, string, moss and grasses. We decided it was a nest of the Audubon Hermit Thrush.

The remaining hours Miss Kent and I busied with writing and watching the bear stew simmering for our evening meal. Baby played on the bed, and between showers I would take her out for an airing. About seven Father came in wet and tired, but with several sets of Hummers, a set of Lincoln Sparrows and two Kinglets located. Reading and story telling filled the hours until bedtime.

June 25—All night the rain was incessant, and this morning it still continues, quiet and steady. As the day dragged on we hovered close to the fire, reading, writing and amusing baby who pointed to the door and spied a Rocky Mountain Pine Grosbeak. Watching him as he flitted from tree to tree, I followed him out into the rain. A Ruby Crowned Kinglet was much interested at his presence; perhaps because he was so beautiful, brilliant red head, yellow breast, black wings marked with white.

The Kinglet scolded while the Grosbeak fed with disdain, never mindful of his chatter. Very shortly the rain drove me in. Evening brought no surcease. The clouds were floating thick about us obscuring everything.

Father was up at Brighton and came home dripping wet with two sets of Audubon Hermit Thrush, one set of White-crowned Sparrow, and a set of Callipe Hummer. It was still light when we went to bed. The rain had resolved itself into a steady downpour. Many times during the night we awakened, but ever the incessant hail stones thumped away.

June 26—and still the rain continued, even heavier. I believe we would have stayed in bed all day had it not been for baby. One could not step to the door between showers without getting wet for trees were laden with drops. About eleven o'clock the clouds seemed to lift, the sunlight broke through clear and bright, momentarily, only to be obscured by more gray clouds that rolled over the mountain top. Then hail and thunder. A high wind was driving the clouds northward, so Father and Edna went to Brighton for milk and butter. The milk was not ready so they

quite late when they returned wet, cold and hungry but with two Broad Tailed Hummers and four White Crowned Sparrows. After dinner we sat about the fire toasting marshmallows.

June 27—Only occasionally during the night did I hear the pitter pitter of rain on the roof, and I looked forward to a morning of sunshine. The thump of hail stones awakened us, and presently Father came knocking for admission, that he might build a fire. We were all beginning to get disgruntled. The fire wood was wet, and the muffins were slow in baking. Baby was peevish when I put her in her bath, cried until I took her out. While dressing her, she bounced off my lap to the floor. Edna ordered the cabin while Dad wrapped eggs and wrote data. Clouds, intermittent showers, but despite which Father rigged himself with the usual paraphernalia and started for American Creek. I did the usual morning washing for baby and then examined the trees about the cabin until the rain drove me in again.

My discovery was two last year's nests of the Audubon Warbler. By afternoon the rain had resolved itself into a steady downpour. Several times I went out to find some dead pine branches to replenish the fire. Between times Edna and I read some old magazines.

Evening brought Father, soaking wet, but smiling for he had taken Lincoln Sparrow 1-4, Audubon Hermit Thrush 1-4, Least Flycatcher 1-4. He went to the American Creek taking the Park City road. Up to 9500 feet the snow fell so heavy that he was forced to find shelter behind a big tree and build a fire to keep worked their way up to Twin Lakes, seeking shelter of some trees during the spasmodic showers. I washed clothes and amused baby during their absence. It quite late when they returned wet, cold and hungry but with two Broad Tailed Hummers and four White Crowned Sparrows. After dinner we sat about the fire toasting marshmallows.

June 27—Only occasionally during the night did I hear the pitter pitter of rain on the roof, and I looked forward to a morning of sunshine. The thump of hail stones awakened us, and presently Father came knocking for admission, that he might build a fire. We were all beginning to get disgruntled. The fire wood was wet, and the muffins were slow in baking. Baby was peevish when I put her in her bath, cried until I took her out. While dressing her, she bounced off my lap to the floor. Edna ordered the cabin while Dad wrapped eggs and wrote data. Clouds, intermittent showers, but despite which Father rigged himself with the usual paraphernalia and started for American Creek. I did the usual morning washing for baby and then examined the trees about the cabin until the rain drove me in again.

My discovery was two last year's nests of the Audubon Warbler. By afternoon the rain had resolved itself into a steady downpour. Several times I went out to find some dead pine branches to replenish the fire. Between times Edna and I read some old magazines.

Evening brought Father, soaking wet, but smiling for he had taken Lincoln Sparrow 1-4, Audubon Hermit Thrush 1-4, Least Flycatcher 1-4. He went to the American Creek taking the Park City road. Up to 9500 feet the snow fell so heavy that he was forced to find shelter behind a big tree and build a fire to keep

By Will Bernard, LL.B.

May the Police Use Trickery To Obtain a Confession?

A wealthy recluse was found slain in his garage one night, and suspicion fell upon a woman who lived nearby. However, the police did not arrest her at once. Instead, a detective called at her house—pretending to be a cosmetics salesman. He managed to draw the woman into conversation, and she confessed that she was "in hot water." He replied: "Tell me all about it. I've got a magic potion that will keep you out of trouble!" Thereupon the woman confessed the murder—and, of course, was immediately arrested. At the trial, she protested that the confession had been obtained by trickery. However, the court said that didn't matter and found the woman guilty. The judge pointed out that the trick was designed merely to bring out the truth.

On a Dark Night, Must a Pedestrian Be Constantly On the Lookout?

A girl was walking home one evening, on an unlighted side street. The night was dark, and she failed to notice a shadowy, unguarded pit jutting part way into the sidewalk. She stumbled into the pit—and suffered a painful injury. Later the girl filed a damage action against the county, since the pit had been left there by a county construction crew. At the trial, county attorneys insisted that the victim herself was equally to blame because she hadn't kept a constant lookout as to where she was walking. But the court allowed the girl's claim. The judge said that, even on a dark night, a pedestrian must take it for granted that the county is doing its duty—keeping the sidewalk safe for walking.

Could a Person Be Punished For Something He Didn't Do?

Two cousins, out hunting one morning, spotted some birds flying across a public highway. They took quick aim and fired. Unfortunately a man happened to be walking along the road just at that moment and he got shot in the shoulder. However, it was absolutely impossible to tell which gun had inflicted the wound. Not knowing which cousin to sue, the man finally filed damage actions against both of them. They protested that it wasn't fair to "punish the innocent along with the guilty," but the court decided to hold them both liable for the mishap. The judge said that, since they shouldn't have been shooting over a public road in the first place, both must share responsibility for what happened.

Must a Will Be Written in Ink?

While thumbing through a magazine in a dentist's waiting room, a man came upon a form for making out a will. On the spur of the moment he seized a pencil, filled out the form, and tucked it in his pocket. A few weeks later the man died. When his widow found out that all her husband's property had been left to his brother, she went to court to contest the validity of the will. She argued that a document of such importance is no good unless made out in ink. However, the court disagreed and held the will valid. The judge said that, even though the man had been foolish to use a pencil, the will was just as "legal" as if written in indelible ink.

A man who lived in a small apartment decided to move to larger quarters. Since his lease still had six months to run, he subleased the place to a woman—after getting the consent of the landlord. A few weeks later, the woman skipped town. When the landlord demanded that the man keep up the rent payments, he flatly refused—on the ground that the landlord had consented to the sublease. However, the court felt differently and held the man responsible for the woman's act.

SHORT STORY

On The Payroll

By Richard Hill Wilkenson

3 Minute Fiction

JUD HAD SEEN the redheaded girl in Mr. Jones' outer office every day for a week. He himself was a copy man, and if she were after the same job that he wanted, it would complicate things. It would cut his chances of success in half, and it would be rather embarrassing because—well, because he thought she was an awfully pretty girl and he liked the way she held her chin high and tried to appear brave.

On Monday of the second week, the redheaded girl dropped her handbag. Its contents spilled all over the place. Jud helped pick them up—lipstick, a bunch of keys, a pawn ticket! Jud's lips tightened when he saw that. Just as he thought—she's had to pawn something in order to live.

Of course the handbag episode gave him the liberty of talking with her. Without half trying, he got her story. It was just as he figured. A sad tale of deprivation and lost hope. If only she could see Mr. Jones. She knew he needed a stenographer and she really was awfully good.

A determined light came into Jud's eyes. Ignoring the protestations of the switchboard girl, he burst through the railed-in space, crossed it in two bounds and threw open the door to Mr. Jones' office.

Mr. Jones was sitting at his desk, smoking a cigar. He looked up with a startled expression when Jud entered. He had heavy lids and a shock of grey hair and belligerent, bushy eyebrows.

The cigar fell from his mouth. He stood up. Before Jud could utter a word, he barked: "Your name Jud Essex?"

"Yes, sir," said Jud, taken aback.

"I'll be damned!" exclaimed Mr. Jones. "Did she tell you who she was?"

"Did who tell me who was?" Jud asked, beginning to think he was mistaken for some one else.

"My daughter! That redheaded girl in the outer office!"

It was Jud's turn to drop a cigar. He'd had one. "Your daughter? That—the girl who wants a job as a stenographer?"

Mr. Jones came round his desk. He was short, but rotund. He glared up at Jud. "You're hired," he said. "I lost a bet, so you're hired. But you'd better make good, or you're fired. Get that!"

"Shut up! Do you want the job, or don't you?"

Mr. Jones stalked out of the office. A man came in another door.

"Of course, I'm serious. I made a bet with Dad that I'd marry you."

and told Jud to follow him. "Kate always wins," the man said. "Here's your desk. Kate wants you to go to lunch with her this noon."

JUD SAT DOWN, speechless. "Do you mean—I am I one of several who have been hired in this fashion?"

Jud passed a hand through his hair. The man left. Jud sat down at his desk. He tried to straighten things out in his mind, and was beginning to get places, when Kate entered.

At lunch Kate said: "Would you like to marry me?"

"Sure," said Jud, grinning weakly.

"All right then. Right after work. I'll be waiting."

She was, too.

He wondered what was next. He found out. She took him to a minister's. She produced a license. Jud tried to grin. He gulped and stared at her.

"Good lord! You're not serious about this?"

Jud suddenly no longer had the feeling that he liked all this. "Now listen," he said. "I can't marry you. In the first place I don't love you. In the second I think you and your old man are crazy. And in the next place, I'm already married and have three kids!"

Mr. Jones called Jud on the phone the next morning. "Mister, you're still working for me if you want the job. I won a bet from Kate, and it's cured her of her screwy notions. Come on down. Your salary's doubled."

proportion. Since there are no seed corn producing companies in the State, we are relying entirely on the midwestern hybrids for our seed, Dorman said. The use of hybrid seed has spread so rapidly that nearly nine-tenths of the corn in the North Atlantic States, about half the corn in the Southern States, and almost all the corn in the Corn Belt will be hybrid this year. During the past five years corn yields in the United States have averaged about a fourth higher than before the war. Most of this increase in production was due to the use of hybrid seed.

Assembly Program at Lemon Grove School

The 84-piece band from Grossmont High School entertained the entire student body with several stirring marches last Thursday morning at 11:15 at the Lemon Grove School. H. Lutz, director of the band, told the students it was always a pleasure to appear at this school, because so many of the Grossmont musicians came from the Lemon Grove Schools. He also complimented the students and teachers on the fine band which Paul Cheatham directs here.

During the assembly program, S. K. Solleder, director of education, presented honorable discharge certificates to eighth grade members of the Junior Traffic Patrol, including David Amott, Bobby Williams and Martin Small.

Jerry Milner of the sixth grade was presented with a large golden trophy by Mr. Picard of the Junior Golfers Magazine. Jerry won the cup in competition at the La Mesa Country Golf Course with a score of 103, and a net of 68. This was in the ten-twelve year old competition. Mr. Picard was introduced by Mrs. Lauritzen, principal of the elementary school.

William Vick's fifth grade class journeyed to San Diego to visit the Pacific Soap Company's plant on Friday. Here is where Lever Brothers new synthetic detergent Surf is now manufactured. Mr. Skarda, the Lever Brothers representative in this district, conducted the entire class on a tour of the soap factory. Mr. Skarda's daughter, Joan, is a member of the fifth grade class.

Previous to their visit, the class had received a letter of explanation from the factory, which helped prepare them for the various processes they later observed. Samples of materials used in soap making were also sent to the science class.

Mothers who accompanied the class were Mrs. J. Blaine, room mother, Mrs. Tristram, Mrs. Shelnutt, Mrs. Skarda and Mrs. Glines.

Vista La Mesa School News

The fourth grade at Vista La Mesa has just completed an arithmetic contest called the "Second Milers." Those students completing three sets of problems had "gone the second mile" and received a star. On completion of 15 sets, the child received a colored star. The sets were to be copied at school and worked at home. All students who entered the contest did so on a volunteer basis. After a class discussion, the boys and girls had agreed that nearly all pupils had done the required work, but that it is those who "go the second mile" who are really learning.

By Roger Conlee
All interest was turned to the faculty-students softball game, at Lemon Grove Junior High, last Friday afternoon. The faculty team took a thrilling 9-8 victory from the fighting students. The students took an early 4-2 lead and stayed ahead most of the game, but their elders caught them in the ninth, and went ahead to victory. Mel Frailey was the faculty's hero as he slid home to beat the throw to catcher. Continued on page 5

Jay Elston, aggressive student first baseman, was the big hitter of the afternoon with a torrid 800 mark for the game. He had four hits in five times. Harry Butler and Fabian Egan, both of the faculty, also had good days, collecting two for four each.

This game was seriously played, a sharp contrast to the 10-2 comedy victory the faculty took in a previous contest. It was a well-played game with good fielding on most plays. The pitching was good also, with Egan tripping the kids on eight hits.

SHORT STORY

Bart's Decision

By Richard Hill Wilkinson

BART HODGES had lived in the city for two years and he was getting tired of it. Country bred, he longed for the smell of sweet, fresh air, the sound of roosters crowing and cows lowing. He wanted to go to bed to the tune of crickets cheeping and bullfrogs jug-a-rumming.

It wasn't as if the city hadn't been kind to Bart. It had. It had taken him to its bosom, and he had prospered. Nor had he been unlovely. He loved the lights, the noise, the hustle and bustle. And most of all he loved a girl.

Tonight, lying on the divan in the living room of his apartment, Bart was troubled with an annoying thought. He wondered, strangely, which he wanted most: Sabina's love or the country.

It was at this particular moment in Bart's speculation that the telephone rang. A strangely familiar feminine voice answered.

"Hello, there, Bart," the voice said. "This is Sadie Blake, fresh in from the old home town. Come down and talk to one of your forgotten friends."

Bart's pulse leaped. Sadie! His boyhood pal, Sadie, whom one day he expected to marry! Sadie, in the city. Here! Now! Fresh from Centerville, with news and notes of the old home town galore.

At that moment Sabina Goodnow was forgotten. There was just one girl in the world for Bart, and that girl was Sadie Blake. He felt suddenly ashamed he had neglected to write, to remember her at Christmas.

Sadie, pink cheeked, blooming with good health and freshness, met him in the lobby of her hotel. "Hello, pal," she cried. "Looking just the same. Thinner, maybe. But otherwise old Bart himself."

"Sadie!" Bob stared in open admiration. "Sadie! How good it is to see you. Tell me, how are things in Centerville? How are the folks? Tell me everything."

"Same old town, Bart. Your folks are fine. Your dad owns a new tractor. Polly, the horse, died, you know. But I suppose they wrote you that. The voters decided to run town water up to William's Hill at the last town meeting. Not so much danger if fire breaks out now. Ed Salmon ran off with Bob Evans' wife. She came back two weeks ago. And Bob took her in shame. Poor kid..."

THEY TALKED for hours. By evening Bart was fully apprised of all the events and happenings in Centerville during the past two years, and assured that his folks were well.

Her name was Sabina Goodnow, and she adored him.

He took Sadie out to dinner, and delighted in showing her around. She seemed a little awed by it all, and more awed by Bart's indifference to the many wonders.

"You get used to it after a while," he said indifferently, and stood gazing thoughtfully at the many lights along Broadway. He felt enlightened and no longer homesick. Strangely enough the noise and bustle associated themselves in his mind with Sabina. He was glad to be a part of it all.

He gazed furtively at the comely Sadie and pictured her in the rural setting of Centerville.

They attended a theater and dined afterward at an exclusive night club. Sadie would have liked to go back to her hotel, but she wanted to please Bart.

"Bart," she said, when at last they stood outside the door to her room. "When are you coming home? When are you going to give up all this and come back where you belong?"

Bart looked down into her eyes and saw something that two years ago he had longed to witness. He sighed deeply.

"Sadie, it's been just great seeing you. Just what I needed. A sort of tonic." He smiled at her gently. "I'm not going back just yet, Sadie. There's something keeping me here, something that before I never knew existed. I know now that it's something greater than anything. Some time I'm coming back, and when I do there'll be two of us."

Cloyed Talks to Kiwanis Club

Assemblyman Ralph Cloyed of this district told of the workings of the California State Legislature at Kiwanis Club Monday noon.

He stated that very few things of a partisan nature come before the legislature, and that there has not been anything of that nature in either session of the legislative body since he became a member.

He believes Lemon Grove has a more serious school problem than most of the other districts of the county.

So much property is owned in the area around San Diego by ex-rivemen who have a tax exemption, that it puts a heavier tax load on the other property, he said.

The last session of the legislature reduced the budget 190 million dollars and created no new taxes he pointed out.

The half cent increase in the state sales tax should go to the counties in which they originate, Cloyed said, and added that he favored legislation returning it to the counties, or apportioning it and let the counties levy a half cent sales tax.

He does not favor taxing homes as to be a burden on the property owner. When a young couple buys a home, he believed they immediately become better citizens, and should not be penalized unduly.

He described the procedure by which Bill 101, affecting the Lemon Grove Fire Protection District, which was passed at the recent special session.

The bill passed the Assembly easily, but ran into difficulty in the Senate, where building contracts succeeded in getting a $1500 limitation for work which could be done without contract. He favored a $3000 limitation under present costs, as he said not much could be done in the way of improvements or construction work for $1500.

New rates are also in effect on Multiple Family Residential Service, Space Heating Service, Commercial Gas Service and Firm Industrial Service. These rates, along with all of the Company's rate schedules, rules and regulations, as filed with the Public Utilities Commission, are available for inspection in the business offices of the Company.

The Public Utilities Commission estimates that these rates will produce an overall increase in gross revenues of approximately 7.3 per cent. The Commission found that this increase in gross revenues was necessary for the Company to earn a fair return on its invested capital.

Increased investment of capital has been necessary in order to provide dependable service in a growing area.

Under the new rates, the cost of gas service for most users will be less than under rates effective prior to 1939. There have been 6 gas rate reductions during the past eleven years.
